Characteristics and quality of energy scenarios

By Stefan Kramer

GRIN Verlag. Paperback. Condition: New. 52 pages. Dimensions: 8.3in. x 5.8in. x 0.1in. Bachelor Thesis from the year 2012 in the subject Business economics - Business Management, Corporate Governance, grade: 1, University of Graz, course: Angewandte Betriebswirtschaftslehre, language: English, abstract: . . . Renewable energy sources on the other hand have been the major primary energy source before the era of the black gold. Today they amount for about 15 of the total primary energy demand, with biomass and hydro-power having with 10 and 5 the biggest shares. All the other renewable energy sources, as wind power, solar heat and photovoltaic, play a minor role since they dont even cover 1 of the primary energy demand. Renewable energy sources could solve both major problems of the energy sector, since they are carbon neutral and by definition renewable. The drawbacks are that at the moment most renewable sources are not competitive and need to be subsidized by governments and the technical challenge of storing the produced energy. It is easy to understand that the future of the energy sector is highly uncertain and that tools that are extrapolating past trends are of no use under these circumstances. In the last years several...
